Pamatong posts bail, fights back

By T. Burgonio and Philip C. Salazar

IT'S HIS turn to fight back.

Lorenzo Uly Pamatong, released from incarceration yesterday after paying bail, is poised to file charges against officials and politicians for allegedly unlawfully arresting him and seven others in Laguna last Friday.

Arrested on charges of illegal possession of firearms and explosives, the disqualified presidential candidate posted bail for ₱600,000 at the provincial prosecutor's office in Sta. Cruz, Laguna a year after arrest of his companions.

Authorities had seized caches of weapons, including an M-16 rifle with an M200 grenade launcher, rifle grenades and M203 grenades from Pamatong and his seven companions following their arrest.

"We will file criminal and administrative charges against the agents for unlawful arrest," said Pamatong's lawyer, Isagani Pardo.

But he would not sue the police now.

Yesterday the Citizens Against Corruption (CAC), an anti-corruption group, has asked the Supreme Court to order him for another restraining order.

UAC, headed chair Chito Arellano and president Martin Lim, who signed the petition, is also asking the help of the Integrated Bar of the Philippines to move for the disbarment.

Pamatong and his companions were arrested at a new house in Sta. Maria, Laguna, and not at a check-point in Makina, also in Laguna, as claimed by the police and ruling Pardo said, adding that he did not see arrested without any arrest or search warrant.

Pamatong was arrested last June after he submitted an affidavit for bail without the surrendering of legal copies in major made in Metro Manila and in other areas last June 20 and 21, among others that featured the case of over 200 motorists.

The lawsuit against his arrest, which the police said is evidence in filing charges of malicious arrested against him.

Additional charges

Pamatong would sue the additional charges of theft and violation of their rights to counsel against the expenses for allegedly filing their suit and mobile phones, and showing their support to be represented by a lawyer, Pardo said.

To be charged an OCA, Pardo said and L. Col. Martin Lim, both of the army's 1st Lt. Jerry Bantuan, 2nd Infantry Division, and Superintendent Provincial Prison and Juvvenile House, both of the Laguna provincial police, he said.

The others are SP4s: Hector Mordones, P03 Juvvenile Guards, and Police Officers 1 Harold Bello and Rowell Doris.

The UAC, petition, on the other hand, asked for Pamatong's "disbarment for life as he is considered a very dangerous person, causing public disorder and lawlessness in society and a danger to the law profession."

US high court deals blow to Bush's war on terror

WASH. (UPI)—The US Supreme Court placed the first limits on President George W. Bush's powers on Monday when it ruled that some aspects can sue the American judicial system to challenge their confinement.

The rulings, the first the court has made on Bush's anti-terrorism policies, marked a defeat for the president's assertion of sweeping power to indefinitely hold "enemy combatants" after the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks.

In one ruling, the court said its nearly 100 foreign-born respondents had, in two years at the US military base at Guantanamo Bay in Cuba, could seek to American courts to challenge their confinement. In another ruling, it said an American news reporter held in his nation is entitled to a chance to contest the government's decision.

"Today's historic rulings are a strong reaffirmation of the administration's argument that its actions in the war on terrorism are beyond the rule of law and are unlawful by American courts," stated a spokesman of the American Civil Liberties Union said.

A US defense official said the Pentagon would consider the rulings in its best to "quickly address problems," but hopes the decision will create a rift, saying it was "important to show it affirms the president's authority to detain enemy combatants in a targeted war on terrorism."

By a 5-3 vote, the justices ruled American courts can consider the claims of Guantanamo Bay prisoners, suggested al-Qaida operatives or Taliban fighters—who said in their lawsuits they were being held illegally in violation of their rights.

"What is presently at stake is only whether the federal courts have jurisdiction to determine the legality of the government's potentially indefinite detention of individuals who claim to be unlawfully detained or wrongfully," Justice John Paul Stevens wrote for the majority.

The ruling did not address the merits of the claims, and the detainees still could face a long legal battle to win their release or major changes in the conditions of their confinement.

But officials of some Guantanamo Bay detainees and their lawyers said in London the ruling would mean the end of the prison camp.

But lawyers from the Center for Constitutional Rights, which brought the case to the high court, said they would seek access to their clients within the week.

In the second ruling, the court divided by a 5-4 vote to rule that Bush has the power to deny habeas corpus claims. Bush himself, who was captured in Afghanistan in a war-punished Taliban fighter and who has been held in a US military jail, it said, the US Congress authorized the detention of non-citizens in the nation's detention camps abroad rather than

But in the most important part of the ruling, the justices by a 5-1 vote ruled he should get a fair opportunity to refute the government's case for detaining him.

Four court members would have allowed Bush, saying his detention was unconstitutional. Two of them—Justice David Souter and Justice Sandra Day O'Connor—joined the majority opinion by last-often justice who said Bush should have a meaningful opportunity to refute or disprove that he is not an enemy combatant.

Kuwait resumes ties with Iraq

KUWAIT CITY—Kuwait on Tuesday announced the resumption of diplomatic relations with Iraq, severed since Saddam Hussein's forces invaded the nation in 1990.

Witnessing the transfer of sovereignty to Iraqi governments on Monday, the state of Kuwait announced the re-establishment of diplomatic relations with its Arab neighbor states. A Kuwaiti foreign minister said that a message was sent by the official Kuwaiti news agency.

Kuwait will send an ambassador to Baghdad at a later time, the spokesman added, saying that the move showed Kuwait's desire "to cooperate and coordinate (with Iraq) in the interests of the two national countries and their peoples and to consolidate the foundations of security and stability in the region."

Kuwait, which served as a staging post for US and British forces during last year's invasion of Iraq which toppled Saddam, has established good relations with the Iraqi interim authority which succeeded the regime.

In making its announcement Kuwait, which up to now had said it would not seek formal US aid, was viewed in Iraq, was following the lead from Washington, which on Monday resumed diplomatic relations which had been cut in February 1990 at the onset of the first Gulf War.

The fight, by a United Nations mediated coalition, brought about the invasion of Kuwait from Saddam's group after seven months of occupation. AP

Of course, I'd watch TV with my grandchildren, and I love all the time that there are some programs that I find useful for them. Ads could do a lot of good if they could not ignore what they see on TV, particularly those which are so direct, vulgar, and obscene.

I am not surprised that the progeny of my grandchildren, a 5-year-old girl, has memorized commercial jingles and some lines from TV programs. She knows Mamma, the Mowgli I naps, I've also heard her sing "Yankee" (I had to ask my grandchildren what that is, and she told me it was the name of a song).

Tapping on 'Team'

THAT is the question to be asked in viewing C. Augustus's column of "Team Tapping," p. 18, in THE OCTOBER 1990 issue of ENR.

As you know, I have been the Vice President of the American Society of Professional Engineers since the time of the inauguration of Jimmy Carter. It is true that Mayor Freddie Tilgner's administration is showing an effort in developing the city's infrastructure, but I think this is somewhat of a truism. This is a normal activity for any city that is not contented, to have some growth. And the fact is now the gateway to a most pragmatic tapping.

My knowledge is that the American Society of Professional Engineers (ASPE) has a number of members, with its impressive educational background and expertise, will be able to assist in the development of the city.

But I would like to control the situation that Mayor Tilgner's administration is now in. I would like to see the city's infrastructure development in a more Injured as he is, I ministered some nursing except the last. One very dramatic experience shared with Father Nunez happened on his Wednesday when we were on our way to Caguas Island for the Holy Thursday service. We left at midnight in a small boat. The weather was calm. However, a storm developed which swiftly and frightfully slowed down our trip. "Sing lauds," St. Augustine Church sang again. The waters were as big as St. Augustine Church. The boat was tossed. Fr. Nunez, Father Barry kept his compass. He kept an eye on his compass and carefully piloted our pump boat away from the howling waves, yet looking one way almost and glancing the other way. After we reached the shore, we reached Caguas. God seemed to smile on just that before we parted.

Clark airport taps Japanese firm for $300-M upgrade

By Christine S. Bono

CLARK International Airport Corp. has tapped Japanese firm Pacific Consultants Inc. to help it draft a master plan for the $300-million upgrading and expansion of the domestic international airport in Manila.

The announcement of the development plan for Clark airport, according to its president, reflects the firm's belief in the importance of the airport as a key to the country's economic growth.

The plan would also involve the development of Clark airport would be integrated with other ongoing infrastructure projects like the North Luzon Expressway, the Clark Delta Highway, the Clark Delta Expressway, among others, he added.

South Korea's Sejong-Ashin Inc. is Clark's first major partner in building its new terminal. Eventually, the firm will manage the airport's operations and maintenance.

RCBC sees P1-B profit

By Doris C. Dumlao

RIZAL Commercial Banking Corp. of the Yuchengco group expects to post a lower net income this year of P1.2 billion.

RCBC vice chair and CEO Cesar Virata said the bank's income was expected to decline from P1.43 billion last year due to the minimal growth in lending in the first six months.

Banks get the bulk of their revenue from the interest charged on loans.

Virata told reporters Monday night after the company stockholders' meeting that there was no significant pick-up in lending activity in the first semester partly due to uncertainties arising from the presidential elections. However, he said lending should increase in the second half, particularly to the food industry and the real estate sector.

"We'll also try to improve our credit card business ... the retail area has been the focus of many banks because of the margins," he said.

RP to sell mangoes to China

By Christine A. Gaylican

THE PHILIPPINES will start exporting its carabao mangoes to China before the end of the year.

Mango Product Exporters Confederation Inc. president Roberto C. Amores said the industry was working closely with the Agriculture Department, which was finalizing the export procedures with the Shanghai Ministry of Agriculture.

Amores said mangoes to be exported to Shanghai and Xiamen must undergo vapor heat treatment to meet safety regulations.

The Philippines is the eighth largest fresh mango exporter in the world market.

It has been delivering fresh mangoes to Japan, Hong Kong, New Zealand, United Kingdom, Switzerland and Belgium.

The country's fresh mango exporters include Amores' Hi-Las Marketing Corp., Marsman Drysdale, Dole Asia Ltd. and Diamond Star Agro Products Inc.

The Philippines plans to challenge Mexico for the top spot in the mango export market.

Mexico currently dominates the $200-million fresh mango market of the United States.

The country's fresh mango exports grew by 20 percent last year, translating to roughly $90 million in export earnings, according to the Philippine Mango Exporters Foundation.

SPIDER SUPERIOR

By Ruel S. Oñe-Vera

WHAT makes Spider-Man so compelling isn't that he has super powers. It's that even with them, his life as Peter Parker still sucks. This circumstance is at the heart of what makes "Spider-Man 2," the sequel to 2002 box-office juggernaut "Spider-Man," an emphatic, superlative motion picture, that that's just the tip of the web.

Two years after the teen-drama remake of the first movie, Peter (Tobey Maguire) is struggling as he tries to juggle being every-cowd-friendly neighborhood Spider-Man, college, a juggle of jobs and, well, just basically being the super-intellectual Peter Parker. In the process, chase of affection Mary Jane Watson (an increasingly lovely Kirsten Dunst), looking up to him, gets engaged to a dashing man in uniform. Realizing the promise of his multiple lives, Peter's own powers seem to be abandoning him and, in a bid to live some semblance of a normal life, gives up the life of a superhero.

But, when ambitious scientist Otto Octavius ("Doc Ock") (Alfred Molina) becomes a terrible accident, radioactive isotopes become grafted onto his body and he goes mad. Obsessed with restoring his ill-fated experiments, Octavius, dubbed Doctor Octopus by the press, becomes a criminal. He eventually strikes a deal with wealthy Henry Osborn (James Franco). Osborn will provide Octopus with the needed material if the scientist brings Spider-Man, whom Osborn vilifies for the death of his father to him. Octavius tries to convince the person who takes Spider's photographs—Peter—by abducting Mary Jane.

Not just action

But there is much more going on in this movie than just the action. Based on the original material by legends Stan Lee and Steve Ditko, screenwriter Steve Soderbert (working from a story penned by screen effects, Pulitzer-winning novelist Michael Chabon) fleshes out the true nature of Spider-Man and of Peter Parker. It's not just about saving the day. It's also about helping his Aunt May (the marvelous Rosemary Harris) fight against heartburn. It's about coming to terms with the requisite sacrifice of being a hero, and about learning what is most important to Peter.

Making it all work is returning director Sam Raimi. After cutting his teeth on the first movie, Raimi finally lets loose in "Spider-Man 2," using the pioneering screen technology and his own directorial prowess to hector his audience. There is a palpable joy and excitement, a certain heat, in the way Apple likes gracefully and kinetically sweeps through New York City's skyline. Not only has the technology from the first movie been refined, it's monumental here: Spidey now really seems to come to life, and Raimi's pointed yet gently diversion shows that he's more than just comfortable with the material now. He really got it.

With its excellent effects and solid performances, "Spider-Man 2" is an action-packed yet intelligent look at what it really means to be a superhero. And it's more amazing than the first movie!

Magneto, fresh from a great turn as "Scarface," simply owns the role of Steve Jackson. He conveys the character's mix of sad sack and charisma with the right amount of manipulation, just as he fills that suit with more than just muscle. Magneto shows us that Spider-Man's powers don't make life easier for him; in fact he has to do the what he has to do every day.

But more than that, Spider brings a greater sense of wonder to the movie, aided by the sharp eye of cinematographer Bill Pope and the profile score by composer Danny Elfman.

The track is, "Spoke that I" is listed in that class! 1980 movie, "Superman II" is many ways. While the first movie introduced the character, it was the second movie that truly defined the character. "Spider-Man 2" shows us what really makes Spidey such an iconic character, because Uncle Parker is a decent kid who just can't catch a break but, burdened with power and responsibility, tries his best anyway. Just like us, he.

And all of this makes 'Spider-Man 2' a superior film to its predecessor, at least here. It makes 2, together with the flash "Ed," worthy films arising from comic books, the best in the world to the Super 'Spider-Man 2' for what it is, a hot, thrilling film for the first time but not last, and history alike...especially since the third movie is tentatively scheduled to be seen in 2007.

Sam Acheson and company have breathed life into one amazing movie. By the end of this movie, revolutions will be made that will change faster than forest fires while new danger emerges from behind the silver screen as fears experienced by millions of all kinds, all in all, pass another day in the life of Spider-Man.

"Tyson Man II" is more than just a cool super hero movie... it's a great movie, period. Time to swing over to the donation sign. It's time to celebrate this actor's life.

Her BF stopped calling when he met a guy who likes her

DEAR Mark and Sep,

My boyfriend for almost five years now is in Europe, studying. We started our relationship long-distance. These past few months, I got the feeling of coldness from him. It was odd. The usual twice-a-day phone conversations disappeared. The last time I called him in June, he was angry and jealous. It was because of my excitement upon learning that he met a guy-friend of mine who had a crush on me. That same guy had a crush on his ex-girlfriend.

From then on, I've the one who has to call him. He doesn't even text because of his "busy life." I think he wants to call it quits, but he doesn't have the courage to do so. I feel that he thinks I may not handle the situation well since he's my first boyfriend.

I love him and I don't want to give him up. What should I do?

GURLALOU

What you should do is rethink about not wanting to give him up.

Five years is already a feat for a relationship that is mostly based on phone calls and text messages. Such a relationship is high-maintenance and has a tendency to grow more and more difficult.

In most long-distance relationships, emotional distance is something that almost always accompanies the physical separation due to many factors: lack of trust, threat of a third party, overwork, etc.. In your case, you have chosen to point a finger at your boyfriend and how jealous he was when he learned that this new guy he met had a crush on you. And thanks for admitting that you're to blame for his jealousy.

I say the green monster is doing the "ot-so-otso" within your boyfriend and the insecurity is eating him. And who can blame him? With the thousands of miles separating you, I guess it's easy to be jealous.

The fact that you're hearing voices and you feel that he wants to call it quits is already an indication of how blurry things are turning out. Add how he has chosen to be out of reach, plus the thought that so many unnamable things could be happening to him over there— I hope you get a clear pic of what you should do.

I believe you've been keeping him up-to-date with what's happening in your life, especially your emotions. Go full blast and tell him what you mentioned in your letter. If he doesn't reply to that, then I guess he's giving you another reason to really think about not wanting to give him up.

MARK

I never thought I'd ever give this kind of advice to anyone, but here it is, anyway: Apologize to your boyfriend. Say sorry for the offense you think you made. You're not guilty of anything except of feeling flattered, which is far from being a crime, but tell him that you're sorry for it and how it had hurt his feelings.

Now, before you get up in arms over such advice, think of it as the last resort in preserving your relationship. By the way you said things have been going, it's not going to take a lot to break your relationship up. Not only is your boyfriend neglecting his responsibilities as your partner, he is also making it more difficult for you to do yours. You will want to give up too, out of exhaustion, sooner or later.

So before that happens, prepare yourself to be a little more self-sacrificing and to be, as we usually call it, "tanga." Swallow your pride and let him hear what you think he wants to hear. That sounds incredibly stupid and shallow, given that you've been partners for five years now, but indulge him and his insecurities just this one time. It's neither deception nor being patronizing. Well, ok, it's a little patronizing, but it won't hurt to try if it means saving the relationship.

Hopefully, his ego would be satisfied with your apology enough for him to open up and tell you what is really bothering him. When he starts being honest with you again, then the two of you can work on the future of your relationship, on whether it will have a future or not. At least, you'd be rid of one-sided presumptions and guesses.

At the same time, be prepared to let him go. I might have been giving you tall and contradicting orders, but let me repeat: these are your last resort. The first one is your desperate attempt to get your boyfriend to connect with you again and the second is for your own protection, when he actually confirms what you've been dreading all along.

It pays to be wise and lots of times, the wise have to pretend to be not-so-smart. In your case, you might have to do this while still keeping your wits about you and looking out for yourself. Take heart; you can survive this.

"SPIDER-MAN 2—Music From and Inspired By" is a collection of music written and performed by musicians influenced by the comic book character.

It includes lead tracks "Unleashed" by Deadhead Confidential from No. 1 Blind Faith (reissued at Western Rock Studios) and "Ordinary," the new track from the Grammy-winning rock band Paley. Each single has companion videos.

The album also features new songs from Bushmanki ("Bad Girl", 20 "Gold On"), Willoward ("Nuts and Cakes"), Maroon 5 ("Phantom"), Taking Back Sunday ("This Photograph Is Proof"), Halsey ("New Boy"), Little Mix ("What's New?"), Alanis ("The Night that the Lights Went out in NYC"), Sia ("Be A Fool") and Jimmy Fallon featuring Brian May ("Guitarman Be A Fool").

In addition, "Speaker Blue 2—Made From and Inspired By" remains the least popular "Lucky Fox," formerly available as a U.S. B-side, and "Give It Up," the first single from the major-label debut of Milwaukee. Also in the album are two compositions by Danny Elfman: "Spooky Suite" and "One Oak Suite."

The CD can include the "Spiders Menu" content of www.spiders.com or www.spiders.com/eng/engindex.html.
